The following is from a Missouri farmer's address before a farmers' institute: "As a rule the farmer knows no firmer friend than the country press. The home paper is distinctly the farmer's own paper, supported directly or indirectly by the farmers who compose the backbone of the printer's subscription list, and largely for what the enterprising merchant advertises. Now, brothers, let us not forget our friends. Let us see that our subscription is paid before the 1st of January, and a year in advance if we can afford it. The man or the paper that fights my battles shall have my support. Another thing, the merchants who advertise are the ones who make it possible for us to get a good local paper; and the man or firm who are two penurious to advertise and help support the local press have no right to the farmers' patronage. I propose hereafter to go to a good, live, local advertiser, and a man who will do his share in supporting the local press, thus contributing to my support, rather than buy of the man who proposes to take all and give nothing in return."

Which of the Two Are You.

I met a man going home with a bag of fruit, a few days later by chance we passed him again and he had a small sack of candy. Our companion on both occasions was the same person. He remarked to us that our friend was a good fellow, but he blew in all he made so foolishly. We merely smiled in reply, but we could not help in our mind as we walked along, to draw a comparison between the two.

One was smoking a cigar that cost as much as the fruit. Burning into ashes and blowing into air the money the other spent so foolishly for nicknacks, that brought the smile of happiness to the cheeks he once thought so rosy and gladdened the eyes that still sparkled like thousands of diamonds with their tell-tale love for him, carrying home for chubby little hands and sweet little lips, one by one the sweetest memories of life, building evening after evening an image in a little heart of home, sweet home, that no time, even into eternity, would destroy; nourishing and kindling a new love that would in old age look back to those happy home-comings and bless his memory as the dearest papa that ever lived. But what of our friend, the critic? Yes, what of him? Which of the two would you rather have been? Which of the two are you?—Gatesville Messenger.

In the days of his youth Senator Blackburn, of Kentucky, was asked by a friend to second a duel. He consented, and at the next sunrise the parties met. It was Mr. Blackburn's duty to say the last words concerning the terms of the duel. One of the Senator's colleagues recently said at a Washington dinner that altho Mr. Blackburn faithfully performed the duty, the duel never took place. A murmur of "Why not?" went around the table at the remark. "For a very simple reason," continued Mr. Blackburn's colleague. "When he finished speaking it was too dark to shoot."—Ex.
